

Bloomberg, 731 Lexington Avenue – New York

Architect: Studios

Client: Bloomberg LP

Completion: 2015

Bloomberg LP underwent a refresh of their 5th and 6th floors which encompassed the main employee gathering atrium and pantry area, visitor arrival flow, as well as the surrounding office and conference spaces.

The atrium has many uses for employee interaction, town hall type events, and wayfinding. Our work included a study of existing levels of sound separation between the pantry atrium and broadcast studio floor, how the proposed use would change sound transmission, and whether or not additional partitioning would be advised. We also reviewed the finishes in both the pantry area as well as along the pathway travelled by visitors to ensure intelligible speech would be achieved and an overall buildup of noise avoided. Acoustic separation of new and existing building services from these newly occupied areas was also in our purview.
